Strategies for Information Governance

April 14, 2014, Nanaimo BC

Ken Oldenburger has been involved in records management for twenty years. His services have involved designing and amending records classification systems and retention schedules, physically and electronically implementing these systems, drafting information governance policies and procedures, creating needs assessments and strategic plans, and providing training and advice, and, of course, filing. Ken has worked for provincial, territorial, municipal, regional and First Nations governments, as well as universities and private corporations. Ken is a founding member and the current president of the Vancouver Island Chapter of ARMA International (www.armavi.org).

Justin Hodkinson has worked for the OIPC since March 2007 as an investigator. Before that, Justin worked in private practice as a lawyer, primarily in the areas of leaky condo litigation, strata property law and plaintiff-side employment law. He graduated from University of Alberta Faculty of Law in 1999 and has an Honours Degree in Social Anthropology. When he's not investigating, his wife and four-year-old son Luc keep him very busy with Lego and craft projects.

Stacie Barclay has been spreading her "Records Pride" for over 15 years in both provincial and municipal governments. She began her RM career as a Records Clerk at the Ministry of Forests, where she was bitten by the Records Bug and from there grew her education and career. Stacie left the provincial government in 2010 to explore the RM world of municipal government, where she is currently the Manager of Records, Information and Privacy for the City of Langford.
